Grammar Worksheets: Misplaced and Dangling Participles
http://www.grammar-worksheets.com

Many students do not understand the difference between a participle and a gerund. Here is the answer:

Gerund: A verb form used as a noun. It ends in ing – always.
Participle: A verb form used as an adjective. It usually ends in ing, en, or ed.

However, a gerund and a participle may look exactly the same, like so:

Gerund: Laughing makes me cry sometimes.
Participle: Laughing, Julio stumbled out of the bar.

Gerunds take care of themselves. Rarely do students write confusing sentences using gerunds. Participles, however, can “dangle” or be misplaced.

Dangling Participle: Slipping on the wet sidewalk, the keys fell from Amaury’s pocket.

This sentence reads as if the keys slipped on the wet sidewalk. Dangling and misplaced participles often give rise to absurdly humorous scenarios. A “dangling participle” has no noun in the sentence to which the participle would logically attach. A “misplaced participle” does have a noun, but that noun does not come directly after the participle, thus creating a confusing sentence. For our purposes, “dangling” and “misplaced” are equivalent.

How Do We Correct a Misplaced or Dangling Participle?

Given the infinite combinations and permutations available in the English language, we have several ways of correcting a misplaced or dangling participle. We will illustrate, however, only three.

1. Turn the Misplaced or Dangling Participle Into a Dependent Clause.

This means that you take the ing word (the participle), give it a subject, turn it into a verb, and attach it to the main clause. Let’s take the example above, with Amaury’s unfortunate slip on the wet sidewalk.

Correct: When Amaury slipped on the wet sidewalk, the keys fell from his pocket.

Here we have taken the original participial phrase (Slipping on the wet sidewalk), and we have turned it into a dependent clause. We understand that “Amaury slipped,” not the keys.

2. Make the Thing Being Modified by the Participle, the Subject of the Main Clause.

This means we take what is being modified by the ing phrase and place it first in the sentence, right after the comma. Again, let’s use the example of Amaury’s unfortunate slip.

Correct: Slipping on the wet sidewalk, Amaury lost his keys when they fell from his pocket.

Note that “Amaury,” the person, NOT “Amaury’s keys” is placed after the comma. You may be tempted to write “Amaury’s keys,” but then you would have the same problem. Keys, even “Amaury’s keys,” do not slip on wet sidewalks; people, like Amaury, do.

3. Place the Participle as Close as Logically Possible to the Noun it Modifies.

Misplaced: Crying and screaming, Mrs. Williams led three-year old Mindy away from the toy store.
Correct: Mrs. Williams led three-year old Mindy, crying and screaming, away from the toy store.
Grammar Worksheets: Misplaced and Dangling Participles

Exercises: Rewrite each sentence to eliminate any misplaced or dangling participles.

1. Shaken, not stirred, James Bond likes his martinis.

2. While driving to the Homestead Campus, a pillow fell from James’s car.

3. Shocked by the foul language on television, the remote control dropped from Aunt Sherry’s hand.

4. Running across Tropical Park, the paddle boats on the lake appeared to be floating on air.

5. Attacked by the school bully, the backpack fell from Abner’s shoulder.

6. Walking barefoot through the tall grass, dew drops felt good between my toes.

7. Driven by insatiable ambition and greed, the computer ran Henry’s stock trading program all day.

8. Confused by the new layout of the house, the soiled diaper fell off the baby as he cried and ran from room to room.

9. Staring up at the tall buildings, the wallet fell from Jasmine’s purse.
Rewrite each sentence to eliminate any misplaced or dangling participles.

1. Upset with the boys’ constant bickering, the car veered into a ditch as the father turned to scold the children.

2. Collecting photographic and physical evidence at the scene, the briefcase bulged with documents when the prosecutor returned to her office.

3. Peeing constantly on the kitchen throw rug, the maid got frustrated from cleaning up after the new puppy.

4. Elated at the thought of his new job, the cell phone dropped from Gus’s hands as he ran to tell Karen.

5. Delighted with the response from the audience, the curtain fell on Kristen.

6. Dividing her time between caring for aging parents and managing her household, it was difficult for Jill to get a full-time job.

7. Keeping mostly to herself, the orchid hung limply from Casey’s dress at the prom.

8. Smiling from ear to ear, it was obvious that Karen was happy with Rick’s decision.
9. Dismissed from his position at the law firm, the Ferrari spun out of control as Ken sped away in a rage.

_________________________________________________________________________________

_________________________________________________________________________________

10. Running two miles a day during the fall, the uniform jersey hung loose on Ivan when lacrosse season began.

_________________________________________________________________________________

_________________________________________________________________________________

11. Fearing allegations of child abuse, the infant was placed in foster care.

_________________________________________________________________________________

_________________________________________________________________________________

12. Excited at the prospect of visiting Greece, a smile graced Ceci’s face as she drove to the airport.

_________________________________________________________________________________

_________________________________________________________________________________

13. Singing at the top of his lungs, it reminded Evan of his days with the church choir.

_________________________________________________________________________________

_________________________________________________________________________________

14. Having been absent for two consecutive days, the attendance clerk required a doctor’s note.

_________________________________________________________________________________

_________________________________________________________________________________

15. Finishing a page from a Disney Princess coloring book, the petals on the flowers were a light shade of pink.

_________________________________________________________________________________

_________________________________________________________________________________

16. Fishing off the Seven Mile Bridge, the power boat almost ripped Peter’s line as it sped by.

_________________________________________________________________________________

_________________________________________________________________________________

17. Arriving in the dorms two weeks early, the room was clean and ready when Will’s roommate arrived.

_________________________________________________________________________________

_________________________________________________________________________________